Gary Hill, Founder, Chairman and CEO of the worlds largest direct response marketing organization, Hill Publishing, in Ft. Lauderdale, FLA., bought an O'Gara stretch limo complete with built-in bar and car phone last fall. He points out that the cost is relative: even adding in the salary of a fulltime driver (a tax-deductible business expense), the limo's total cost to him, under $50,000, was less than the Rolls-Royce he was driving at the time.

Hill found his limo a business asset from morning to night: he now picks up key employees at their homes for an early meeting over coffee and Danish in transit to the office and closes deals with clients as he takes them to the airport in the afternoon. "It seems like that last 15 minutes on the way back to the airport is when most deals are made," he says. "We're sitting back, having a drink and very relaxed." And in the evening Hill sometimes awards use of the limo to salesmen as a bonus for good work.
